1ST MEETING OF SIGNATORIES
Abu Dhabi, UAE, 9-11 December 2012

UPDATE OF SCIENTIFIC DATA UNDERPINNING THE RAPTORS MOU

Background

1. Earlier this year, the Interim Coordinating Unit of the Raptors MoU commissioned BirdLife International to review the Annexes to the Raptors MoU to confirm that the underpinning scientific information remains accurate and up-to-date. The original feasibility study was carried out over 7 years ago. The aim of publishing the results of this review is to ensure that Signatories are best placed to take informed decisions, both in the development of their National or Regional Strategies, and in the overall implementation of the Raptors MoU.

2. The Update Report includes suggestions for potential changes to the Annexes which will require careful consideration by Signatories. The Interim Coordinating Unit believes that these are issues that a Technical Advisory Group could consider intersessionally, with a view to it preparing a detailed set of Recommendations for presentation at the 2nd Meeting of Signatories.

Action requested:

The Meeting is invited to:

- (a) Review and take note of the Update Report.
- (b) Consider instructing the Technical Advisory Group, if established, to advise if any revisions are required to the Annexes of the Raptors MoU.

1. INTRODUCTION

1.1 Overview of update task

BirdLife International was requested by the Interim Coordinating Unit of the UNEP/CMS Memorandum of Understanding on the Conservation of Migratory Birds of Prey in Africa and Eurasia (Raptors MoU) to provide an update of the scientific information underpinning the MoU for consideration by the Signatories. Seven years have passed since the initial scientific analysis was completed (Tucker 2005) and it was considered important that the Signatories have access to the latest available information to support their work at the 1st Meeting of the Signatories in December 2012 and going forward. This review uses BirdLife International's data which are held in the IUCN Species Information Service (SIS) and BirdLife's World Bird Database (WBDB), including detailed information on the world's avifauna and the sites important for their conservation. These databases are regularly updated and revised through processes coordinated by BirdLife International. The analyses in this review are based upon the updated species and site lists proposed in this report. The data included were accessed from the BirdLife databases between June and October 2012.

1.2 Geographic coverage

The Raptors MoU is intended to promote the conservation of migratory 'Birds of Prey' in the Range States and territories of Africa and Eurasia. This review follows the geographical area defined in Annex 2 of the MoU, which includes all Afrotropical and Palearctic countries and territories, and Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka. The only political change since the Raptors MoU came into force is the creation of South Sudan, which became an independent state in 2011. South Sudan is therefore included in the proposed update to MoU Annex 2 (Annex 2 to this report).

1.3 Species coverage

The MoU is intended to promote the conservation of migratory Birds of Prey in the African-Eurasian region and this is interpreted in the text of the MoU as meaning migratory Falconiformes and Strigiformes species occurring in Africa and Eurasia, listed in Annex 1 of the MoU.

Taxonomy and nomenclature

The Raptors MoU follows the taxonomy, scientific nomenclature and English names used by BirdLife International and Annex 1 of the MoU was based upon the BirdLife taxonomy at that time. By maintaining its own taxonomic checklist of the world's bird species, BirdLife is able to ensure a globally consistent taxonomic standard relevant to its role as the official IUCN Red List Authority for birds. The BirdLife Taxonomic Working Group (BTWG) ensures that the BirdLife taxonomic checklist evolves in a structured, documented, transparent and defensible way. The current checklist is available at www.birdlife.org/datazone/info/taxonomy.

It should be noted that the general use of BirdLife taxonomy by the MoU does not of course preclude Signatories to the MoU from agreeing deviations from it where considered desirable (however, the BirdLife databases, and the analyses possible based upon them, only contain associated data for those entities recognised as species by the BTWG).

Definition of migratory species

According to the CMS definition, migratory species means "the entire population or any geographically separate part of the population of any species or lower taxon of wild animals, a significant proportion of whose members cyclically and predictably cross one or more national jurisdictional boundaries". However, there is no definitive CMS list of migratory species and thus the species originally included in Annex 1 of the MoU were those species with ranges within the African-Eurasian region and which were defined as ‘True Migrants’ in the Global Register of Migratory Species (GROMS) database (Tucker 2005).

BirdLife International records the migratory status of all of the world’s bird species within the WBDB and SIS. This information is based on a number of key references including Stotz et al. (1996), the Handbook of the Birds of the World (ed. J. del Hoyo et al. 1992–2011, Barcelona: Lynx Edicions) and various regional handbooks, fieldguides and family monographs, as well as expert opinion synthesised in BirdLife’s Species Factsheets and range maps (see www.birdlife.org/datazone/species). This information is routinely updated to reflect the latest scientific findings.

BirdLife recognises a species as being fully migratory if “a substantial proportion of the global or regional population makes regular or seasonal cyclical movements beyond the breeding range, with predictable timing and destinations. This includes species that may be migratory only in part of their range or part of their population, short-distance migrants and full migrants that may also occasionally respond to unusual conditions in a semi-nomadic way. Following the definitions of Dodman and Diagona (2007), this excludes ‘rains migrants/arid migrants’ i.e. species which move with unpredictable timing and destination in response to irregular rainfall patterns, ‘nutrition migrants/post-roost dispersers’ i.e. species that disperse daily from roosts to forage, ‘post-breeding dispersers’ which may not make cyclical movements i.e. dispersers that may not return to the same breeding area, and ‘environmental response migrants’ i.e. species that move opportunistically in response to irregular environmental conditions such as rainfall, fire, locust eruptions etc.”.

There are some differences between the definitions of ‘migratory’ used by CMS and by BirdLife, but there may be benefits in taking an inclusive approach to the species list for the MoU. In this report we have reviewed the original MoU Annex 1 and flagged any species that could be considered for addition to Annex 1 according to a broader definition of ‘migratory’. We have also flagged any species from the original MoU Annex 1 which BirdLife does not currently consider to be ‘migratory’. However we have not proposed any changes to the species list on the basis of migratory status; instead we propose review of migratory status of Annex 1 and potential Annex 1 species as a possible task for a future Technical Advisory Group.

2. MoU SPECIES

2.1 Potential updates to the species list—Annex 1 of the MoU

Having reviewed the latest relevant scientific information we suggest below some potential updates to Annex 1 for consideration by Signatories. In each case the rationale behind the potential update is explained and further information is provided in the annexes to this report. Annex 6 provides a list of Annex 1 species found within each country and Annex 7 provides a list of the countries in which each species regularly occurs.

Potential updates on the basis of taxonomy/ nomenclature

A number of updates have been made to the BirdLife taxonomy since the MoU came into force and some potential updates to Annex 1 are therefore offered for consideration by Signatories.

Milvus lineatus has been combined with M. migrans (Sibley and Monroe 1990, 1993) following the Association of European Rarities Committees Taxonomic Advisory Committee (AERC TAC), a treatment supported by review by the BTWG of the Milvus phylogeny presented by Johnson et al.

(2005) which nests lineatus within the migrans clade. It is therefore suggested that Milvus lineatus be removed from Annex 1.

Nyctea scandiaca has been transferred to the genus Bubo following Wink and Heidrich (1999). It is therefore suggested that in Annex 1 of the MoU the scientific name used for this species be changed to 'Bubo scandiaca'

Spizaetus nipalensis has been transferred to the genus Nisaetus following Haring et al. (2007). It is therefore suggested that in Annex 1 of the MoU the scientific name used for this species be changed to 'Nisaetus nipalensis'.

Potential updates on the basis of migratory status

The chief difference between the BirdLife and CMS definitions of migratory is that the former is a more ecological definition which does not require the crossing of a national jurisdictional boundary. However, within the species group under consideration there are no species designated as migrants by BirdLife that would not also qualify under the CMS definition in this respect. The more equivocal wording of the CMS definition does, however, permit a broader interpretation of 'migratory' and Annex 1 therefore includes a number of species that BirdLife does not currently regard as full migrants (see species listed in Annex 8a). It is recommended that a future Technical Advisory Group review the migratory status of these species. It is worth noting that the migratory behaviour of many species within this region remains incompletely known, so future research may reveal that species not currently considered migratory do actually undertake movements consistent with the above definitions of migratory. For this reason it may well be worthwhile for the MoU to take an inclusive approach to Annex 1, particularly where raptor species with uncertain migratory status face many of the same threats that the instrument is intended to address. Potential candidate species, for which there is emerging evidence of migratory behaviour, are proposed for future consideration by a Technical Advisory Group and listed in Annex 8b.

Potential updates on the basis of conservation status

In Table 1 of the MoU, the species listed on Annex 1 of the MoU are divided into three categories depending on their global and regional conservation status.

Category 1—species of Global Conservation Concern, i.e. classified as globally threatened or Near Threatened on the IUCN Red List (IUCN 2001).

Category 2—species that are considered to have an unfavourable conservation status at a regional level within the MoU Range States

Category 3—all other migratory species

In its capacity as official IUCN Red List Authority for birds, BirdLife is responsible for coordinating a process to provide annual revisions to the Red List with a complete assessment of the world's avifauna conducted every four years.

In this review, it is proposed that Category 1 should be updated to reflect the current IUCN Red List for birds (BirdLife International 2012). In practice this would only result in one change, with Falco naumanni moving from Category 1 to Category 3. This species no longer approaches any of the thresholds for 'Vulnerable' status under the IUCN criteria because recent evidence indicates a stable or slightly positive population trend over the last three generations. Consequently, it has been downlisted from Vulnerable and now qualifies as Least Concern. The recovery can be attributed to actions implemented following the development of a Species Action Plan and increased resources to implement the plan. This included full legal protection in all relevant EU countries, management of breeding colonies, provision of artificial nest boxes, maintenance of foraging habitats through agri-environment schemes and awareness-raising activities. For more information on this species visit www.birdlife.org/datazone/speciesfactsheet.php?id=3589

The Category 2 species currently listed in Table 1 of the MoU comprise Species of European Conservation Concern (SPEC) according to BirdLife International (2004) and other non-European species which were deemed through expert review to have unfavourable conservation status in the African-Eurasian region.

BirdLife defines the following three SPEC categories:

SPEC 1—Species of Global Conservation Concern, i.e. classified as globally threatened, Near Threatened or Data Deficient.

SPEC 2—Species that are concentrated¹ in Europe and have an unfavourable conservation status.

SPEC 3—Species that are not concentrated in Europe but have an unfavourable conservation status.

The SPEC assessment has not yet been updated and consequently no changes to Category 2 are proposed in this report. However, it is noted that when the SPEC list is reassessed through publication of 'Birds in Europe 3' (planned for 2014), Haliaeetus albicilla is unlikely to qualify as a SPEC owing to increasing population trend (www.birdlife.org/datazone/speciesfactsheet.php?id=3364) and will most likely warrant future relocation to Category 3.

In this report no updates have been proposed to the additional Category 2 non-European species considered by expert review to have an unfavourable conservation status in Asia, the Middle East or Africa. However these species are proposed for future re-evaluation by a Technical Advisory Group and are listed in Annex 8c.

A number of species currently listed in Category 3 of Table 1 of the MoU have declining global populations according to their Red List assessments and consequently might warrant future inclusion in Category 2. These species would also benefit from a technical review to assess whether their global population trend is also reflected in the African-Eurasian region, potentially qualifying them for 'Unfavourable Conservation Status' and justifying their inclusion in Category 2; they are therefore listed in Annex 8d.

2.2 Habitats used by African-Eurasian migratory Birds of Prey

Within the WBDB and SIS, BirdLife International records the habitats used by the world's bird species. Of the 75 proposed species in Annex 1 of this report 73% (55) occur in forest, 69% (52) are found in artificial landscapes such as arable farmland, pastureland and urban areas, and 64% (48) utilise natural grasslands (see Figure 1). It should be noted that these are global habitat preferences and consequently may not necessarily reflect the habitat usage within the MoU region or individual countries.

2.3 Conservation status of African-Eurasian migratory Birds of Prey

The IUCN Red List is widely recognised as the most authoritative and objective system for classifying species by their risk of extinction (Regan et al. 2005, de Grammont and Cuarón, 2006, Rodrigues et al. 2006). It uses quantitative criteria based on population size, rate of decline, and area of distribution to assign species to categories of relative extinction risk (IUCN 2001). The assessments are not simply based on expert opinion; they must be supported with detailed documentation of the best available data, with justifications, sources, and estimates of uncertainty and data quality (IUCN 2008). Red List Authorities are appointed to organise independent scientific review and to ensure consistent categorisation between species, groups, and assessments.

BirdLife International is the official IUCN Red List Authority for birds. Updates to the Red List are made annually, with complete assessments of all recognised species conducted every four years. Since the first comprehensive global assessment in 1988 there have been six full assessments.

The following analysis is based on the updated species list proposed in Annex 1 of this report and on data synthesised as part of the 2012 IUCN Red List assessment process. Of the 75 proposed Annex 1 species, 13 (17%) are classified as globally threatened or Near Threatened and would consequently qualify for Category 1 (see Figure 2 and Table 1).

IUCN Red List Index

The Red List Index (RLI) has been developed as an indicator of trends in the status of biodiversity. It illustrates the rate of biodiversity loss in terms of the rate that species are slipping towards (or away from) extinction. The index is based on the number of species in different categories of extinction risk on the IUCN Red List and the movement of species between categories owing to genuine improvements or deteriorations in status (Butchart et al. 2004, 2005, 2007). The RLI integrates the net impacts of species improving in status and being downlisted to lower categories of threat (usually a consequence of conservation interventions) and those deteriorating in status and being uplisted to higher categories of threat (owing to declining populations and increasing threats).

RLI values relate to the proportion of species expected to remain extant in the near future without additional conservation action. An RLI value of 1.0 equates to all species being categorised as Least Concern, and hence that none is expected to go extinct in the near future (see Annex 10 for full methodology). An RLI value of zero indicates that all species have gone Extinct. A downwards trend in the graph line (i.e. decreasing RLI values) means that the expected rate of species extinctions is increasing, i.e. that the rate of biodiversity loss is increasing. A horizontal graph line (i.e. unchanging RLI values) means that the expected rate of species extinctions is unchanged. An upward trend in the graph line (i.e. increasing RLI values) means that there is a decrease in expected future rate of species extinctions (i.e. a reduction in the rate of biodiversity loss).

As well as monitoring global trends, the RLI can be disaggregated to compare trends for suites of species in different biogeographic regions, ecosystems, habitats, taxonomic subgroups or relevant to different international treaties.

Red List Index for African-Eurasian migratory Birds of Prey

The RLI for those species listed in Annex 1 of this report shows that they are less threatened than birds overall and currently faring better than raptors in general (Figure 3). However, these differences are relatively small, and the downward trend in the graph line does reveal that there has been an on-going deterioration in the status of these species since the first avian Red List assessment in 1988.

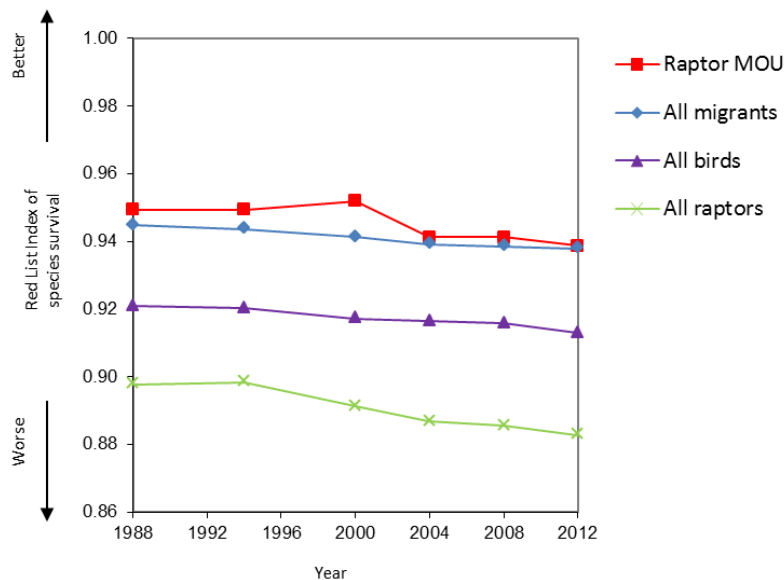

Figure 3. Red List Index of species survival for all bird species (n=10,064), all migrants (n=1,862), all raptors (n=312) and proposed Annex 1 species (n=75). RLI values relate to the proportion of species expected to remain extant in the near future without additional conservation action. An RLI value of 1.0 equates to all species being categorised as Least Concern, and hence that none are expected to go extinct in the near future. An RLI value of zero indicates that all species have gone Extinct.

The RLI presented here represents the best available tool for tracking conservation status trends in the suite of species covered by the MoU and is a useful high-level indicator over time. However, it is important to note that the index is based on only 75 species and is consequently derived from a small number of category changes. In addition, the RLI is not highly sensitive to small-scale or rapid changes in the status of species. The IUCN categories are relatively broad and species often have to undergo substantial changes in order to cross the thresholds between categories.

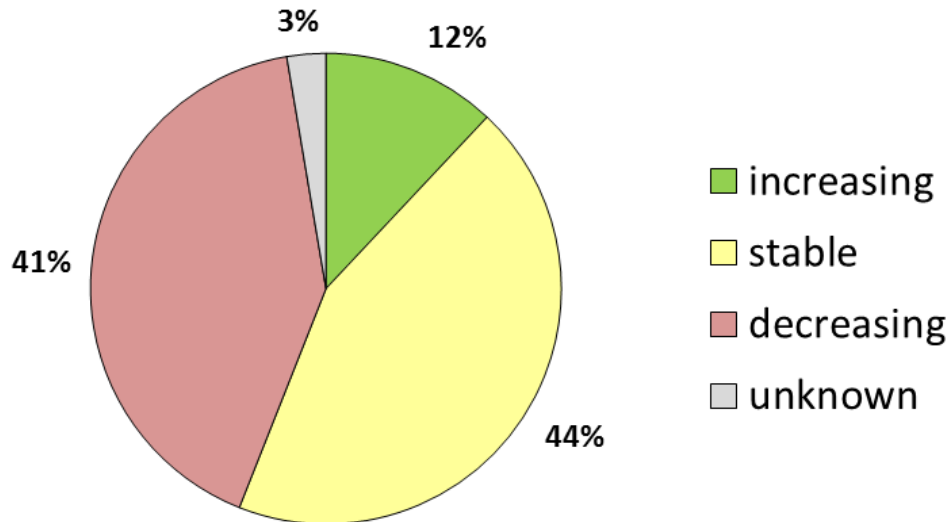

Figure 4. Global population trends according to 2012 Red List assessment for all proposed MoU Annex 1 species (n=75).

Data on the global population trends of all MoU Annex 1 species reveals that despite the comparatively healthy RLI, 31 of the 75 Annex 1 species (over 40%) are considered to have populations that are currently declining globally. Only nine (12%) have populations that are assessed to be increasing globally (Figure 4). Going forward it may be useful for the Raptors MoU to use the proportion of different Annex 1 species with different population trends as another indicator of conservation status of this group of species.

2.4 Threats to proposed Category 1 species

As the IUCN Red List Authority for birds, BirdLife collates and maintains information on the threats impacting bird species. Threat types are coded against the IUCN-Conservation Measures Partnership (CMP) Unified Classification of Direct Threats for analytical purposes. Threatened taxa are coded for Level 1 threats (e.g. Agriculture) and more specific Level 2 threats (e.g. Annual & perennial non-timber crops). The timing, scope and severity of threats to globally threatened and Near Threatened species are regularly assessed in order to determine the level of impact. High impact threats affect the majority of the population and cause rapid declines, while low impact ones affect the minority and cause slower, albeit still significant, declines. More detailed information on threat classification and how threat impact scores are calculated visit www.birdlife.org/datazone/info/spcthreat.

Analysis of these data reveals that there are a number of threatening processes driving declines in the 13 proposed Category 1 (globally threatened or Near Threatened) species. Foremost among the threats identified are agro-industrial farming, which is recorded as affecting nine species, deliberate persecution and control, which is recorded as affecting seven species and the unintentional effects of hunting and trapping, which is recorded to affect seven species (Figure 5).

None of the threats identified for these Category 1 species is currently recorded as having a high impact on the species concerned. Instead, 28% are recorded as having a medium impact, 56% are recorded as having a low impact, whilst 3% of threats are assessed to have had a past impact that while contributing to the species historical decline are no longer considered a problem. It is worth noting that these threat assessments relate to the global populations of the Category 1 species and therefore may not necessarily represent the principal threats facing these species within the African-

Eurasian region covered by the MoU or within individual countries. Annex 9 of this report provides a detailed breakdown of the threats identified for each of the proposed Category 1 species.

2.5 Conservation measures needed for proposed Category 1 species

In its role as IUCN Red List Authority for birds, BirdLife documents and categorises the conservation actions required to safeguard all globally threatened and Near Threatened species. Analysis of these data reveals that the most important conservation actions needed for the proposed Category 1 species relate to land and water management and protection, better education and awareness and improved legislation (see Figure 6). These constitute the key conservation actions that are required across the species' entire ranges and consequently may not represent the principal measures needed within the African-Eurasian region covered by the MoU.

3. MoU SITES

3.1 Background to the indicative site list (Table 3 of the MoU)

The provisional site list provided as Table 3 in the MoU was a list of Important Bird Areas (IBAs) that qualified according to global and regional criteria for globally threatened species and congregations of the Annex 1 species. However this was intended as an indicative, rather than a comprehensive list (Tucker 2005). Since that time the BirdLife Partnership has made considerable progress in IBA identification in the African-Eurasian region. The proposed updated Table 3 contains considerably more sites than the provisional list identified in the original MoU. This is partly because more IBAs have been identified, but it is also because the draft list included only sites that qualified according to A1, A4iv and B1iv criteria. Of the 135 sites on the provisional list, 98 have been retained and appear on the updated Table in red. Some of the 37 sites that have not been retained no longer meet the criteria; however some have been redefined (the boundary has changed) and have therefore been renamed and it has not been possible to accurately match them to current locations (see Annex 4). The process and criteria for IBA identification are outlined below, but there is further information at www.birdlife.org/action/science/sites/.

Important Bird Areas

Important Bird Areas (IBAs) are a set of sites of international significance identified for birds (but often also significant for the conservation of other biodiversity), using a standardised set of data-driven criteria and thresholds, based on threat and irreplaceability. To date, more than 11,000 IBAs have been identified in nearly 200 countries and territories. The BirdLife Partnership aims to identify, monitor and protect a global network of IBAs for the conservation of the world's birds and other biodiversity.

The categories of IBA and the criteria used to select them are listed in Box 1. BirdLife has identified global-level IBAs throughout the world (using the 'A-level' criteria); however, within Europe and the Middle East, IBAs have also been identified at the regional and sub-regional levels. This has been done most comprehensively in Europe, where a set of 20 criteria has been used to identify sites of global, European (regional or 'B-level') and of European Union (sub-regional or 'C-level') significance (Heath and Evans 2000). A more detailed explanation of IBA criteria, and how they have been applied in different regions, can be found in Heath and Evans (2000), Fishpool and Evans (2001) and BirdLife International (2004); see also www.birdlife.org/datazone/info/ibacriteria.

Box 1. Categories and criteria used to select Important Bird Areas. Sites may qualify for multiple categories and criteria.

A: Global

A1. Species of global conservation concern

The site regularly holds significant numbers of a globally threatened species, or other species of global conservation concern.

A2. Restricted-range species

The site is known or thought to hold a significant component of the restricted-range species whose breeding distributions define an Endemic Bird Area (EBA) or Secondary Area (SA).

A3. Biome-restricted species

The site is known or thought to hold a significant assemblage of the species whose breeding distributions are largely or wholly confined to one biome.

A4. Congregations

- i. The site is known or thought to hold, on a regular basis, $\geq 1\%$ of a biogeographic population of a congregatory waterbird species.
- ii. The site is known or thought to hold, on a regular basis, $\geq 1\%$ of the global population of a congregatory seabird or terrestrial species.
- iii. The site is known or thought to hold, on a regular basis, $\geq 20,000$ waterbirds or $\geq 10,000$ pairs of seabird of one or more species.
- iv. The site is known or thought to be a 'bottleneck' site where at least 20,000 storks (Ciconiidae), raptors (Accipitriformes and Falconiformes) or cranes (Gruidae) regularly pass during spring or autumn migration.

B: European

B1. Congregations

- i. The site is known or thought to hold $\geq 1\%$ of a flyway or other distinct population of a waterbird species.
- ii. The site is known or thought to hold $\geq 1\%$ of a distinct population of a seabird species.
- iii. The site is known or thought to hold $\geq 1\%$ of a flyway or other distinct population of other congregatory species.
- iv. The site is a 'bottleneck' site where over 5,000 storks, or over 3,000 raptors or cranes regularly pass on spring or autumn migration.

B2. Species with an unfavourable conservation status in Europe

The site is one of the 'n' most important in the country for a species with an unfavourable conservation status in Europe (SPEC 2, 3) and for which the site-protection approach is thought to be appropriate.

B3. Species with a favourable conservation status in Europe

The site is one of the 'n' most important in the country for a species with a favourable conservation status in Europe but concentrated in Europe (SPEC 4) and for which the site-protection approach is thought to be appropriate.

B: Middle East

B1: Regionally important congregations

The site may qualify on any one of the three criteria listed below:

- i. The site is known or thought to hold $\geq 1\%$ of a flyway or other distinct population of a waterbird species.
- ii. The site is known or thought to hold $\geq 1\%$ of a distinct population of a seabird species.
- iv. The site is a 'bottleneck' site where over 5,000 storks, or over 3,000 raptors or cranes regularly pass on spring or autumn migration.

B2: Species with an unfavourable conservation status in the Middle East

The site is one of the five most important sites in the country/territory for a species with an unfavourable conservation status in the Middle East (threatened or declining throughout all or part of their range in the region) and for which the site-protection approach is thought to be appropriate.

B3: Species with a favourable conservation status but concentrated in the Middle East

The site is one of the five most important sites in the country/territory for a species with a favourable conservation status in the Middle East but with its global range concentrated in the Middle East, and for which the site-protection approach is thought to be appropriate.

C: European UnionC1. Species of global conservation concern

The site regularly holds significant numbers of a globally threatened species, or other species of global conservation concern.

C2. Concentrations of a species threatened at the European Union level

The site is known to regularly hold at least 1% of a flyway population or of the EU population of a species threatened at the EU level (listed on Annex I and referred to in Article 4.1 of the EC Birds Directive).

C3. Congregations of migratory species not threatened at the EU level

The site is known to regularly hold at least 1% of a flyway population of a migratory species not considered threatened at the EU level (as referred to in Article 4.2 of the EC Birds Directive) (not listed on Annex I).

C4. Congregatory – large congregations

The site is known to regularly hold at least 20,000 migratory waterbirds and/or 10,000 pairs of migratory seabirds of one or more species.

C5. Congregatory – bottleneck sites

The site is a 'bottleneck' site where at least 5,000 storks (Ciconiidae) and/or at least 3,000 raptors (Accipitriformes and Falconiformes) and/or 3,000 cranes (Gruidae) regularly pass on spring or autumn migration.

C6. Species threatened at the European Union level

The site is one of the five most important in the European region (NUTS region) in question for a species or subspecies considered threatened in the European Union (i.e. listed in Annex I of the EC Birds Directive).

C7. Other ornithological criteria

The site has been designated as a Special Protection Area (SPA) or selected as a candidate SPA based on ornithological criteria (similar to but not equal to C1–C6) in recognized use for identifying SPAs.

The BirdLife Partner, Partner Designate, Affiliate or country programme usually leads nationally in IBA identification but, where possible, they do so collaboratively, via a national IBA steering committee comprising the major stakeholder institutions, including government agencies. Not only does their knowledge and expertise enrich the programme, but the involvement of government from an early stage in the process enhances the future conservation prospects of unprotected sites. Usually there then follows a thorough review of existing knowledge and a wide consultation with regional experts that often involves one or more national workshops, at which a draft list of potential IBAs is drawn up and reviewed. Data-poor sites on this list become targets for future survey work. With all available data compiled, a set of IBAs is 'proposed' by the national Partner organisation or equivalent. Each site is then assessed by the BirdLife Secretariat, who check to confirm that it meets the criteria for which it has been proposed, and to ensure that the criteria have been applied consistently both within and between national datasets.

All IBA data are maintained within the WBDB (a web-enabled version of which allows national IBA coordinators from around the world to keep the information up-to-date).

Legislators and planners are increasingly using IBA inventories to evaluate and improve the effectiveness of the protected-area networks under their jurisdiction. IBA inventories are widely used as 'shadow lists', for example to help evaluate national Special Protection Area identification and designation within the EU, and, for wetland IBAs, by the Ramsar Convention.

3.2 Potential update to the indicative site list (Table 3 of the MoU) for consideration

The proposed update to the Table 3 site list presented in Annex 3 to this report includes all confirmed IBAs identified across the MoU Range States and territories that qualify for a MoU Annex 1 species or are identified as a 'bottleneck' site for migrating raptors (Criteria A4iv and B1iv). In total, 2,621 sites have been identified across 103 countries. Of these, 1,193 sites are considered sites of global conservation significance identified for 'A-level' criteria. These include 62 sites identified as being globally important migration 'bottlenecks' (A4iv) through, or over which at least 20,000 raptors and other soaring birds regularly pass during spring or autumn. The remaining 1,428 sites across Europe and the Middle East have been identified at the regional ('B-level') and sub-regional ('C-level') levels; these include 52 sites that are identified as regionally important 'bottlenecks' (B1iv) through which over 3,000 raptors regularly pass on spring or autumn migration.

Table 2. Number of IBAs identified for Annex 1 species across the MoU Range States and territories by region.

Region	Original site list	Proposed site list presented in Annex 3
		Global-level IBAs	Regional-level IBAs	Total IBAs
Africa	20	211	0	211
Asia	11	372	0	372
Central Asia	0	214	0	214
Europe	75	370	1,300	1,670
Middle East	29	26	128	154
Total	135	1,193	1,428	2,621

Trigger species are coded according to their seasonal use of the IBA. Of the MoU Annex 1 species triggering the 2,621 sites listed in Annex 3, 57% are recorded as breeding visitors, 6% are recorded as non-breeding or wintering visitors, 5% are recorded as passage visitors and 20% are recorded as resident at the site (Figure 7). It is therefore the case that some sites listed in Annex 3 support only non-migratory (resident) raptor populations. Although the focus of the MoU is migratory raptors, effective conservation of these species requires implementation of adequate conservation measures for both migratory and sedentary sub-populations of these species within the MoU region.

Comparison with ‘Migratory Soaring Birds project’ bottleneck sites

Twenty-five bottleneck sites in the Rift Valley-Red Sea flyway were highlighted in a report produced for the Migratory Soaring Bird (MSB) project (Porter 2005)) as being important for soaring bird species. This list was cross-checked against the proposed site list for the Raptor MoU (Annex 3 to this report); 21 of the MSB bottleneck sites also appear on the Raptor MoU site list. Two of the sites not included in the Raptor MoU list are triggered by species other than raptors (eg. storks, cranes, pelicans). The MSB bottleneck site list also contains two sites which are not confirmed IBAs; these sites are not included in the Raptor MoU site list.. However, all confirmed IBAs identified for raptor species in Porter (2005) are included in the proposed site list (Annex 3 to this report).

Protection status of updated site list proposed (Annex 3)

Analysis of information drawn from the World Database on Protected Areas (<http://www.wdpa.org/>) reveals that the majority of IBAs identified for migratory raptors within the MoU region overlap to some extent with some kind of Protected Area. However, although 64% of the 2,621 sites have at least 10% of their area designated, only 40% are designated in their entirety. There is also considerable regional variation in protection status, with far higher levels of protection in Africa, Asia and Europe compared to Central Asia and the Middle East. For example, whilst over half of African sites are fully protected, only 21% of sites in the Middle East are fully protected and 67% of sites in this region have little or no protection at all (map 1).

Map 1. The location and protection status of the 2,621 sites proposed for inclusion in the updated Raptor MoU site list. A regional breakdown of protection status is provided in the accompanying charts.

It is worth noting that level of ‘protection’ of a site here refers to the proportion of the site covered by current Protected Areas legislation. However, even formal designation of the entire area of a site may not confer protection on the ground. Conversely, strict protection may not always be the most desirable mechanism for safeguarding a site, especially if it disrupts ecologically important land-use practices. For instance, in the Middle East, a traditional system of community management known as hima is being championed as an alternative to formal Protected Area designation.

Prioritisation of sites for conservation action

Many factors will influence which sites within a country are prioritised for conservation action (be it designation, management, restoration, monitoring etc.). Some Signatories may be able to promote the conservation of migratory raptors at all the sites listed for their country in Annex 3 of this report. Where a means of prioritisation is required it could be argued that those IBAs meeting global (A-level) criteria for raptor species should be a high priority for conservation action, as should those sites that meet criteria for multiple raptor species. A site holding 3% of the global population of a species could be considered a higher priority for conservation action than one holding 0.5% of the global population. A site that supports globally threatened species could be considered a higher priority than one that does not. A site faced with imminent threats could be considered a higher priority for conservation action than one which is not under threat. Ultimately these decisions will be made by Signatories taking into account the biological priorities, political constraints and practicalities of achieving site-based conservation in their country.

3.3 Condition of proposed MoU sites (listed on Annex 3 of report)

In addition to the conservation status of MoU species, the condition of the sites identified to be important for these species is a key potential indicator for the Raptors MoU. Monitoring these sites provides a means of tracking population trends / habitat changes overtime, provides an early warning of threats to the sites and can help evaluate the success of any conservation actions implemented. Compiling such information for the suite of sites in a country or indeed for the MoU region as a whole can provide conservation planners with a valuable overview and can help direct attention to areas where support/resources/action need to be increased. The IBA monitoring framework is a simple framework which is being used by BirdLife Partners and others to monitor sites and it is described below.

IBA monitoring

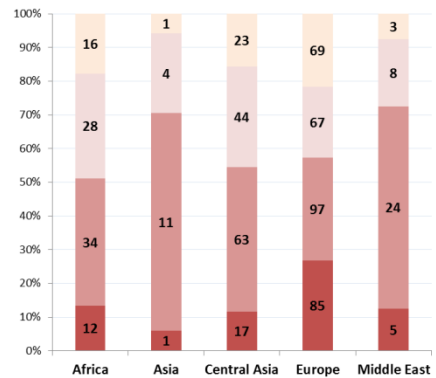

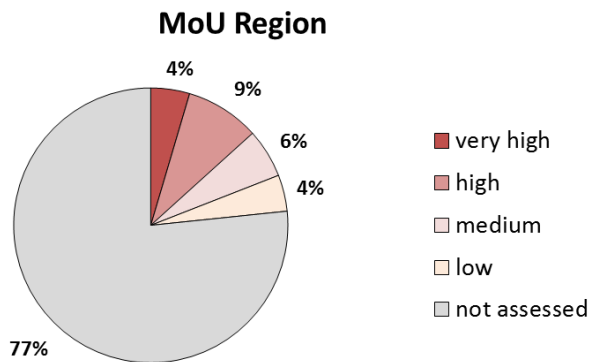

The world’s IBAs are monitored using a simple, robust and inexpensive framework (http://www.birdlife.org/datazone/userfiles/file/IBAs/MonitoringPDFs/IBA_Monitoring_Framework.pdf). This involves regular assessments in which each IBA is scored against indicators of pressure (the threats facing the site), state (the condition of birds and/or their key habitats) and response (the action being taken to conserve the site). The data recorded by observers in the field are entered into the WBDB—which then automatically converts this information into impact scores on a simple 4-point scale for pressure (3=low, 2=medium, 1=high, 0=very high), state (3=favourable, 2=near favourable, 1=unfavourable, 0=very unfavourable) and response (3=high, 2=medium, 1=low, 0=negligible).

Status of IBA monitoring for MoU countries

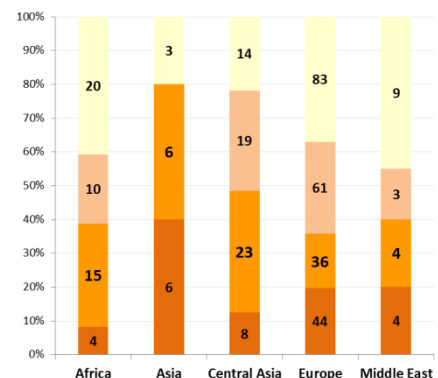

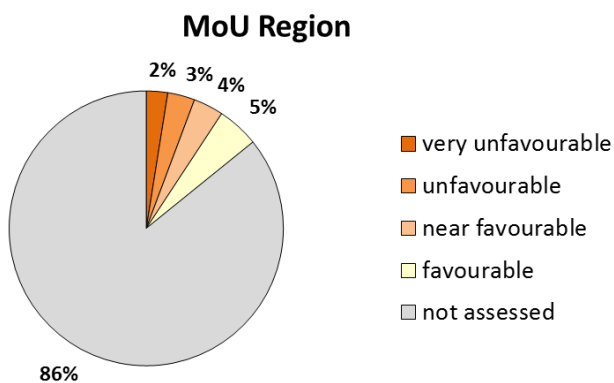

IBA monitoring has been embraced by a number of BirdLife Partners, and the information amassed has resulted in numerous scientific publications and national biodiversity reports. However, there are still areas of the MoU region where the monitoring framework is not widely implemented. Figure 6 shows that 77%, 86% and 83% of Annex 3 sites, respectively, have not yet been assessed against indicators of pressure, state or response. It also reveals that the levels of IBA monitoring vary considerable between regions, with more widespread and complete monitoring taking place in Africa and Central Asia compared with Asia, Europe and the Middle East. Of those sites that have been monitored 57% are experiencing high or very high pressures and 40% are in an unfavourable or very unfavourable state. Only 28% of monitored sites are currently receiving high or medium levels of conservation response (see Figure 8). Monitoring results, albeit for only the small number of sites that have so far been assessed, reveal significant regional differences in the status of IBAs. For example, over 70% of monitored sites in the Middle East and Asia are experiencing high or very high pressures, whilst only 51% of monitored sites in Africa face this intensity of threat. Similarly, whilst 80% of monitored sites in Asia are in an unfavourable or very unfavourable state, most monitored sites in Europe (64%) are in a favourable or near favourable condition. Levels of conservation response also vary between regions. In Africa, 41% of monitored sites are experiencing high or medium levels of response; however, in Asia no site that has been monitored is deemed to be receiving a high level of response and only 13% are experiencing a medium response (see figure 6). As the IBA monitoring framework is expanded across the region, its results will become an increasingly useful gauge of conservation progress at the site scale.

Pressure

State

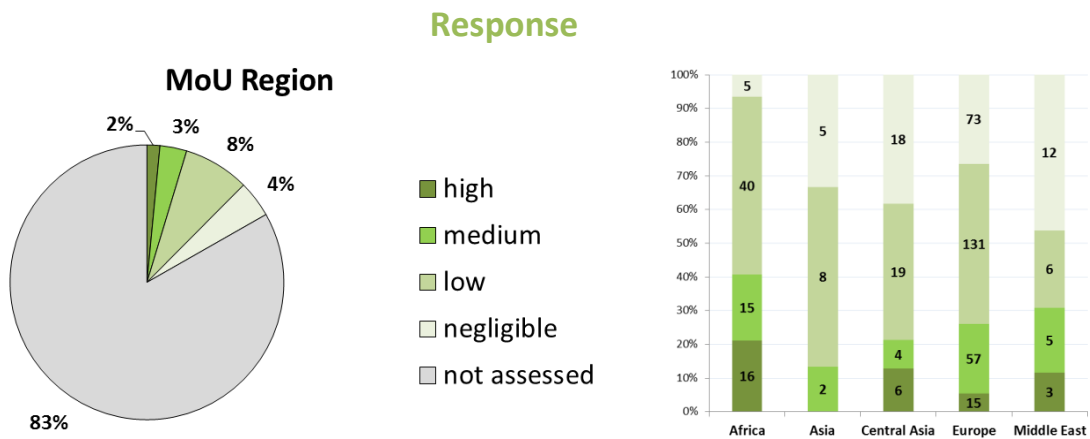

Figure 8. Monitoring scores for pressure, state and response for proposed MoU sites (Annex 3 of report) across the different MoU regions. The regional breakdown bar charts exclude those sites that have not yet been monitored.

3.4 Threats to sites important for migratory raptors

As part of assessing the ‘pressure’ element of IBA monitoring, information on the threats to sites is collected and scored by National IBA coordinators. The system for threat categorisation is based on the threat types used in the IUCN Red List assessment of species (see section 2.3). Threats are scored according to their timing, scope and severity in order to determine an overall impact score for each threat for each site.

For those proposed MoU sites that have been evaluated using the IBA monitoring framework, agricultural expansion and intensification is recorded as the most common threat, affecting 589 sites (Figure 9a). Of these sites, 34% (201) are threatened by livestock farming and ranching and 16% (98) are threatened by small-holder farming of annual crops (Figure 9b). After agriculture, the next most significant threat is over-exploitation, persecution and the control of species, recorded as affecting 558 sites. Of these sites, 34% (189) are threatened by direct mortality of trigger species through hunting and trapping (Figure 9c). In interpreting information on threats to sites it is important to recognise that the different regions have made unequal contributions to the data-set, so important threats in regions with a relatively small proportion of sites monitored may not be represented in the overview for the whole MoU region.

4. MOU REVIEW

4.1 Possible tasks for consideration by a future Technical Advisory Group for the Raptors MoU

The ICU is considering proposing the establishment of a Technical Advisory Group to provide technical and scientific input to support and assist Signatories to implement the Raptors MoU. Such a panel might provide a function similar to that of the Technical Committee of the African-Eurasian Waterbird Agreement (AEWA). During the course of compiling this report, a number of issues have been noted that would benefit from review/input from a Technical Advisory Group of this sort. These are listed below as potential tasks for consideration by Signatories:

- Review potential changes proposed to MoU Annex 1 (species) and MoU Table 3 (sites) and in particular:
 - Review existing MoU species to consider whether they should remain on Annex 1— e.g./ where there is emerging evidence they are non-migratory (Annex 8a of this report) or are proposed for removal for any other reason
 - Review candidate MoU species – e.g./where there is emerging evidence they are migratory or are proposed for inclusion for any other reason (Annex 8b of this report)
 - Review MoU Annex 1 species placed in Category 2 on basis of previous expert review (Annex 8c of this report)
 - Review Annex 1 species currently listed in Category 3, but which could be candidates for Category 2 on basis of declining global population trend (Annex 8d of this report)

- Review sites on original indicative MoU site list which it has not been possible to match to updated potential MoU site list (Annex 4 of this report)

Many of these review tasks could be repeated at appropriate intervals, perhaps following regular scientific update reports that tie in with the cycle of Meetings of the Signatories, in order to ensure that the scientific information underpinning the MoU remains as up-to-date as possible, going forward.

4.2 Updating and expanding the scientific information available to and feeding from the MoU

The structure of this report and the analyses therein may provide a useful starting point for any future update of the scientific information underpinning the MoU, and demonstrates what is currently possible using the BirdLife datasets (noting that these could be further developed to support reporting requirements of the MoU). Any future Technical Advisory Group for the MoU might wish to suggest additional information/analyses they feel would be beneficial to update and expand the scientific information available to the MoU.

It may be helpful to supplement this kind of report with a periodic review of the scientific literature to ensure that any reports of changing population trends of MoU Annex 1 species, any emerging information on MoU Annex 1 species' ecology, any reported changes to the condition of MoU sites etc. are noted and included in periodic updates of the scientific information.

In order to address the elements of the three objectives listed in the Action Plan of the MoU (which relate to alleviating threats to Category 1 and 2 species and reducing and avoiding new or potential threats), it would be informative to be able to verify the pertinent threats to species at the country level within the MoU area, and analyse threats to all Annex 1 species, not just those species listed in Category 1. A Technical Advisory Group might therefore wish to consider further assessment and analysis of threats to Annex 1 species as a future task.

Ultimately, if the Raptors MoU adopts an online reporting framework, this could provide a possible mechanism for exchange of information from Signatories to the MoU, the Technical Advisory Group of the MoU and organisations such as BirdLife International, seeking to maintain up-to-date data in support of the MoU. Existing online systems such as the AEWA online reporting framework could readily be adapted to fit the purpose of the Raptors MoU.

Review of MoU guidelines on developing national/ regional strategies

Within two years of the MoU becoming effective, Signatories commit to preparing and submitting to the ICU a national or regional strategy or equivalent documents for Category 1 and, where appropriate, Category 2 species of the MoU. Annex 5 and Annex 1 of this report provide a useful summary of relevant species for each country to include in such a document. A number of areas of national-level intervention are listed in the Guidelines for Developing National and Regional Strategies within the framework of the Raptors MoU (UNEP/CMS 2012). Scientific updates like the current report could help to support a number of these interventions. For example:

- Updating the IUCN Red List information could help to support Signatories to improve legal protection of Annex 1 species.
- Providing updates to the MoU site list and site protection information could help to support Signatories to protect and/ or manage important sites and flyways

- Providing information on threats impacting Annex 1 species and the sites important for them could help with awareness-raising re: the problems faced by birds of prey and the measures needed to conserve them.

One national level intervention which emerges from this report as being important but is not currently listed in the Action Plan or as a national intervention in the Guidelines (p.4 of UNEP/CMS 2012) or the proposed format for national and regional strategies (p.7 of UNEP/CMS 2012) is to monitor not only populations of Annex 1 species in the national network of sites, but the condition of the sites themselves. Monitoring species populations at key sites can contribute to national population estimates and provide a baseline from which progress can be measured. Recognising that some care is needed in interpreting national level trends for migratory species, national monitoring programmes can collectively contribute to our understanding of population trends at the flyway level. However, monitoring the condition of the sites important for migratory raptors is not covered in the current guidelines and proposed format for national and regional strategies.

Monitoring the sites important for these species nationally provides an early-warning mechanism of threatening processes impinging upon sites and thereby the species they support, and allows action to be taken before any resulting population declines in the raptor species might be detected. Monitoring forms a basis for adaptive management, allowing the impact of any conservation interventions to be measured and management regimes adjusted accordingly. In UNEP/CMS (2012) the report structure (3.) suggested within the guidelines, and under 4.2.1 an additional point could be included under 4.2.1 to encourage Signatories to monitor the condition of sites important for migratory raptors and under 3. to encourage Signatories to report on the condition of their national or regional site network. In addition under 4.2.1, although designation and appropriate management of sites important for migratory raptors are important activities, designation without proper enforcement may fail to deliver protection, so specific mention of ensuring adequate enforcement of site designation might strengthen this activity.

Population size and trend information from national and regional strategies (under 3.4 of suggested report structure in UNEP/CMS 2012) and threats to species data (under 3.7) could provide useful information for IUCN Red List assessment of Annex 1 species and it would be helpful if this information could be shared with BirdLife for this purpose.

Under activity 4.2.2 (UNEP/CMS 2012) re: undertaking appropriate EIAs in accordance with CBD and CMS guidance, it could be helpful to add a note about promoting the practice of making results of such EIAs publically accessible (such documents often contain important information but are rarely made available).

Synergies between the Raptors MoU and other Multilateral Environmental Agreements (MEAs)

There are a number of potential synergies between the Raptors MoU and other MEAs and exploring these and making specific reference to them in the guidelines for developing national/regional strategies could help to enhance the reach of the MoU. Under the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) Parties are required to update their National Biodiversity Strategies and Action Plans (NBSAPs) taking account of the CBD's new the Strategic Plan 2011–2020. National strategies for the implementation of the Raptor MoU can easily be taken account of / included in revised NBSAPs, specifically in relation to CBD strategic goals for reducing pressures and promoting sustainable use, and safeguarding ecosystems and species. The MoU focus on threatened species and their critical sites is particularly relevant to achieving Targets 12 and 11 respectively. CMS resolution 10.18 provides guidelines on the integration of migratory species into NBSAPs and these could provide Signatories with a useful source of guidance. There are also clear synergies between the Raptor MoU and CITES on the issue of trade in migratory raptors (e.g. Saker Falcon), with opportunities for reinforcing conservation efforts through consistent approaches.

National biodiversity liaison committees and similar entities might be in a good position to consider how best to integrate national strategies for the implementation of the Raptor MoU with NBSAPs and other MEA implementation mechanisms.

Annex 8a. MoU Annex 1 species that may not be fully migratory. The following species are not recorded as full migrants in the IUCN Species Information Service (SIS) and BirdLife World Bird Database (WBDB) and may warrant review by a future Technical Advisory Group.

Scientific name	Vernacular name	Migratory status (BirdLife)
Aviceda jerdoni	Jerdon's Baza	Not a Migrant
Accipiter virgatus	Besra	Altitudinal Migrant
Accipiter ovampensis	Ovampo Sparrowhawk	Nomadic
Aquila rapax	Tawny Eagle	Not a Migrant
Aquila adalberti	Spanish Imperial Eagle	Not a Migrant
Falco alopex	Fox Kestrel	Not a Migrant
Falco biarmicus	Lanner Falcon	Not a Migrant
Falco pelegrinoides	Barbary Falcon	Not a Migrant
Strix uralensis	Ural Owl	Not a Migrant
Strix nebulosa	Great Grey Owl	Nomadic
Surnia ulula	Northern Hawk Owl	Nomadic

Annex 8b. Species not currently listed on Annex 1 of this report for which there is some evidence of migratory behaviour based on a provisional literature review. These species may warrant evaluation by a future Technical Advisory Group.

Scientific name	Vernacular name	Red List status
Falco cuvierii	African Hobby	LC
Gyps africanus	White-backed Vulture	EN
Gyps himalayensis	Himalayan Vulture	LC

Annex 10. Methodology for calculating the Red List Index (RLI).

The RLI is calculated from the number of species in each Red List category (Least Concern, Near Threatened, Vulnerable, Endangered, Critically Endangered), and the number changing categories between assessments as a result of genuine improvement or deterioration in status (category changes owing to improved knowledge or revised taxonomy are excluded). The original methodology was described in detail in Butchart et al. (2004, 2005), and revised in Butchart et al. (2007): the latter is used here. An RLI value is calculated as follows:

$$RLI_t = 1 - \frac{\sum W_{c(t,s)}}{W_{EX} \cdot N}$$

where $W_{c(t,s)}$ is the weight of category c for species s at time t , which ranges from 1 for Near Threatened to 5 for Extinct (W_{EX}), and N is the number of assessed (non-data deficient) species. Put simply, the number of species in each Red List category is multiplied by the category weight, these products are summed, divided by the maximum possible product (the number of species multiplied by the maximum weight), and subtracted from one. This produces an index that ranges from 0 to 1 (see below).

These conditions are met by back-casting all non-genuine category changes to the year of first assessment (1988 for birds). In other words, we assume that species should have been classified at their current Red List category since 1988, apart from those species for which genuine category changes have occurred, in which case they are assigned to appropriate time periods, corresponding to the dates in which all species were reassessed (see Collar and Andrew 1988, Collar et al. 1994, BirdLife International 2000, BirdLife International 2004, BirdLife International 2008b). To determine these genuine cases, all category changes during 1988-2008 were assigned a 'reason for change', allowing genuine ones to be distinguished from those resulting from improved knowledge or taxonomic revisions (see Butchart et al. 2004, 2005, 2007 for further details).
